

DESCRIPTION OF DEGREES OFFERED

Bachelors of Science in Natural Health (B.S.) - This degree is for anyone who is eager to learn more about the natural health field. It is a complete study that covers subjects such as anatomy, physiology, iridology, nutrition, herbal healing, theories of naturopathy and homeopathy, and more.

Master of Science in Natural Health (M.S.) - This degree prepares a person for a deeper understanding of subjects taken at the bachelor degree level. It is considered “advanced training.” Subjects learned are alternative and conventional treatments, food remedies, lipid biochemistry, allopathic and naturopathic medical terms, diagnostics & statistics for mental disorders, drug-herb-vitamin interaction, and more.

Master of Naturopathic Psychology (M.N.Psy.) - Kingdom College of Natural Health has always been a “pioneer.” And we are the first natural health college in America to offer a Master’s Degree in “Naturopathic Psychology.” This degree will be useful for those interested in psychology and for others who hold related degrees in the field of Human Behavior. For the most part, it’s an integrative degree and will benefit one who desires to help friends, family, or clients to gain the “extra-edge” in improving their health which psychology alone cannot give.

Master of Public Health (M.P.H.) - the most widely recognized professional credential for leadership in public health. This program is designed for public health leaders, who aspire to high-level roles in state, federal, international health, or the private sector. Our students come from all parts of the world and often have relevant experience, most have a prior doctoral degree, although a doctorate degree isn’t required to enroll. Many students are preparing for advancement in their organizations or transition into new fields. The MPH is a demanding, interdisciplinary program emphasizing student-directed learning, problem solving, and the acquisition of fundamental public health skills.

Master of Herbology (M.H.) - Main stream medicine has overlooked the value and health benefits of herbs. This degree is in much demand and will help familiarize one with hundreds of herbal remedies and their scientific use in humans. A student will learn how to use herbs for different human maladies and learn the differences in the various herbs found on different continents. Many kinds of herbs, safety measures, and their use will be explored such as: Ayurveda, Traditional Chinese Medicine, Native American herbs, and South American herbals.

Master of Clinical Nutrition (M.C.N.) - Today in our society, health Professionals are expected to possess adequate knowledge in nutrition. This is a degree that will keep one updated on the latest research that is dependable and reliable. A holder of this degree will be knowledgeable in nourishment, detoxification, fluid and electrolyte balance, blood types, anti-oxidants, anti-stress disorders, physical fitness, infectious diseases, and mental performance. Once the eating and nutritional habits of one is explored, then a regimen may be designed to help anyone to better his/her lifestyle. Oddly, even some medical doctors today are taking studies in nutrition, since this significant field has been overlooked by medical colleges.

Master of Homeopathy (M.Hom.) - Homeopathy is one of the oldest forms of medicine in Europe, the United States, and Canada. It is a drugless form of medicine and is making a strong “whirl-wind” return in the 21st Century. The Master of Homeopathy degree will build a strong foundation for one in homeopathic knowledge and will give him/her the expertise to consult (or counsel) with others about their health concerns.

Doctor of Homeopathy (D.Hom.) - One of the most respected degrees in the world. However, few if any, American Colleges of Natural Health offer such a degree. This is the same degree offered by many renowned homeopathic colleges in Europe and India. A holder of the Doctor of Homeopathy degree will have an understanding of European, Indian, and American homeopathy. And a practitioner shall be able to treat friends, family, or clients appropriately. A holder of the Doctor of Homeopathy degree is prepared to enter a private practice or become a lecturer or natural health consultant.

Doctor of Naturopathic Psychology (D.N.Psy.) - This degree is attractive to a Licensed Clinical Psychologist, lecturer, nutritionist, or a person in the mental health field. In some instances, persons who simply want the knowledge this degree offers may also apply. With such a degree, one may integrate several forms of medicine with great success in a private practice. There is a pressing need for the knowledge this degree provides in the North American society, inasmuch as most colleges of natural health tend to minimize the significance of psychological knowledge and training for a practitioner.

Doctor of Pharmacognosy (D.P.) - Many people have a keen interest in botanical medicine. However, due to various legal or personal reasons, they do not wish to become clinical practitioners. Considering this need, this degree program is designed for people who wish to become apothecaries or pharmacists of botanical medicines. Upon graduation, the individual would be qualified to consult or operate a formulary and dispensary that serves the holistic health community.

Doctor of Natural Health (D.N.H.) - This degree prepares a person to be a consultant or practitioner of the healing arts. In states where practitioners of naturopathy are licensed and degreed as "ND" or "NMD" one must consider other options. One may earn the Doctor of Natural Health (DNH) and act as a "consultant" in accordance to state laws and respective residency.

Doctor of Naturopathy (N.D.) - This coveted degree is often held by individuals who are not physicians. However, it is not uncommon for a Chiropractor, Medical Doctor, or Doctor of Osteopathy to hold such a degree. This degree program teaches a student about the role of good and bad fats, detoxification, parasite prevention, geriatric therapies, energy healing, sports nutrition, and much more.

Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) – A Ph.D. degree has always been considered a "Research Degree." However, it is not uncommon for the Doctor of Medicine, Doctor of Osteopathy, Doctor of Chiropractic as well as other professionals to earn it. This degree is similar to the Doctor of Naturopathy, with the exception that it requires more research and more theses (or dissertations) to earn it. Our Doctor of Philosophy degree is presently in much demand where new licensing laws are restricting traditional naturopaths from using the ND and NMD degrees. The holder of this degree will have the knowledge to teach, research, or practice naturopathy in accordance to state laws or respective residency.

PROFESSIONAL DEGREES

Licensed professionals are beginning to realize the value of nutrition and natural healing. However, these professionals have not been afforded natural health training from traditional medical colleges. When a licensed doctor uses natural substances for clients, his/her state board may chastise him/her for deviating from "traditional protocol." Nonetheless, physicians are willing to risk losing their license when they see the results produced by proper nutrition and alternative therapies. Today in America the public is "crying out" for a more humane treatment for heart disease, cancer, and other diseases. Now, more than ever, professional practitioners have an obligation to stay up-to-date on research and employ healing systems that bring results for clients.

Kingdom College of Natural Health is proud to offer the following professional degrees through its School of Integrative Medicine:

Doctor of Naturopathic Medicine (N.M.D.) - In some circles this degree is becoming more recognized as an "integrative medicine degree." Various professionals, who already hold a professional degree, or license, or the equivalent, may apply. Certain exceptionally experienced non-degreed and non-licensed people may qualify for a specialized curriculum leading to the NMD degree. If interested, contact the KCNH Admissions Office.

Doctor of Homeopathic Medicine (H.M.D.) – This degree is the same as above with the exception of the emphasis being on homeopathy rather than the general study and practice of naturopathy.
